Fish Hatchery Near Richfield Which Is a Promising Proposition.

Richfield, July 12.-Very few people in this county realize that there is an industry in full operation that bids fair to be the greatest thing in the state. That is the fish industry as it is being operated by Ed Clark and Frank Heppler of this city and W. W. Clark of Monroe. A cou-ple of years ago the Clarks invested in some ponds of water near Annabella, with the intention of putting in a few fish for local use and making it a place of recre-ation for their families in the summer. They had no thought of the profit at-tached to the propagation of fish. But since engaging in the business the impor-tance dawned upon them and now the in-dustry is in the hands of a company and no doubt within a few years it will bring more money into this country than any other industry in this part of the state. The Herald correspondent made a trip to the ponds yesterday and the immensity of the proposition was the first thing that impressed itself on him. A visit to the place is necessary to realize the great possibilities that are awaiting these gentle-

The first thing neecssary was the construction of a large drain in order that the ponds could be suc-cessfully emptied and cleansed, as clean-liness of surroundings is one of the requi-sites for successful fish culture.

The drain constructed cost in the neighborhood of $1,000. The water is conducted to the river in a northerly direction, but the land lying between the ponds and the river gets the benefit of all surplus water and there is a large stream of water passing through the drain continually. The main object of the drain, in addition to cleanliness, is to rid the ponds of the large

The water is delivered into each vat through $1\frac{1}{2}\text{-inch pipe.}$ These vats are sixteen feet long and twelve inches deep and twelve inches wide. Several propositions have been made to get rid of the survivors. It was proposed to give private and non-commissioned officers pensions of $500 a year-a big figure for France-and officers more in proportion, and turn them out to shift for themselves. There was a cry of indignation from all France. A majority of the old men had no one to go to, no one to care for subalterns and twenty-three non-commissioned officers and privates. Rooms and a mess hall have been reserved for the officers. The privates live and sleep in the infirmary proper, and its kitchens suffice for all. Besides their rations, which are good and liberal, and the uniform of the house, not unlike a Prussian infantry soldier's with its long tailed coat and flat cap, they all receive a little pocket money, from 40 cents a day for the commandant down to 5 cents for the private. great emperor. Now that is all past waiting for the last call.

Has Many Traditions.

The institution, which dates from 1670, when Louis XIV and his minis-Colbert, established it, began the buildings and provided for its endowment, has an inexhaustible mine of tradition. One of the soldiers was the woman soldier, Angelique Marie Josephe Duchemin, who was admitted in 1797, when she was 26 years of age, and died there in 1850. She enlisted in the Fortysecond regiment of infantry in 1792 in place of her husband, whose name was Brulon, and who had been killed in action. She was made corporal inside a year and rose to the rank of sergeant. In command of a post with twentytwo men at Lunico, Corsica, she made a heroic resistance to a vastly superior force of English. At Cesco, May 24, 1794, she escaped at night from the hardly pressed fort and ran to Calvi. Finding no men there, she induced sixty women to find guns and ammunition and followed her back to the fort the next night. With this re-enforcement the enemy were beaten off, but it was the end of Angelique's soldiering. She had a saber cut in the right arm and a bayonet thrust through the left. So crippled, they sent her to the Invalides.

Soldier 126 Years Old Admitted. On June 21, 1850, a sergeant named Kolembaski, a Pole, was admitted. He had papers establishing that he was 125 years old. He had been wounded at Fontenoy and Rosbach, but did not claim asylum for 100 years, when he had no one left in the world. He died soon after his admission. The great tragedy of the hotel was on March 30, 1814, just before the allies entered Paris after Napoleon had been consigned the Elba. On that day the governor caused the destruction of all the flags and other trophies captured from the other nations of Europe in various wars, which were gathered at the Invalides under the guardianship of the veterans. All the inmates were assembled in the court of honor about a huge pyre which the servants had prepared. On this were laid 1,600 captured standards, with various other insignia and the sword of Frederick II of Prussia taken from Potsdam. The drums rolled and the trumpets sounded the charge as fire was set to the pile. The band played the "Marsellaise" as the flames mounted. It is related that the sword of the great Frederick leaped out of the fire, but a pitiless veteran picked it up and it was destroyed. The scene lasted ten minutes. The twisted iron relics were thrown into the Seine, but they were fished out again in 1826, and since 1863 they have been grouped in a trophy as one of the ornaments of Napoleon's
